Introduction

The Disability Action Plan recognises the critical and ongoing work to uplift and uphold equity, access and inclusion for people living with disability. It is part of the Victoria University Progressive Inclusivity Framework (2025–2030).

Grounded in the social model of disability, the plan recognises that people with access needs are often ‘disabled’ by environmental, attitudinal, and systemic barriers.

It is also closely aligned with Universal Design for Learning, which champions principles that embrace the genuine diversity of learners rather than a mythical ‘normal’.

Creating an accessible and inclusive university is everyone’s responsibility. This plan calls on all of us – individually and collectively – to commit to building a welcoming, respectful, and accessible VU where everyone belongs and thrives.

Nothing About Us Without Us

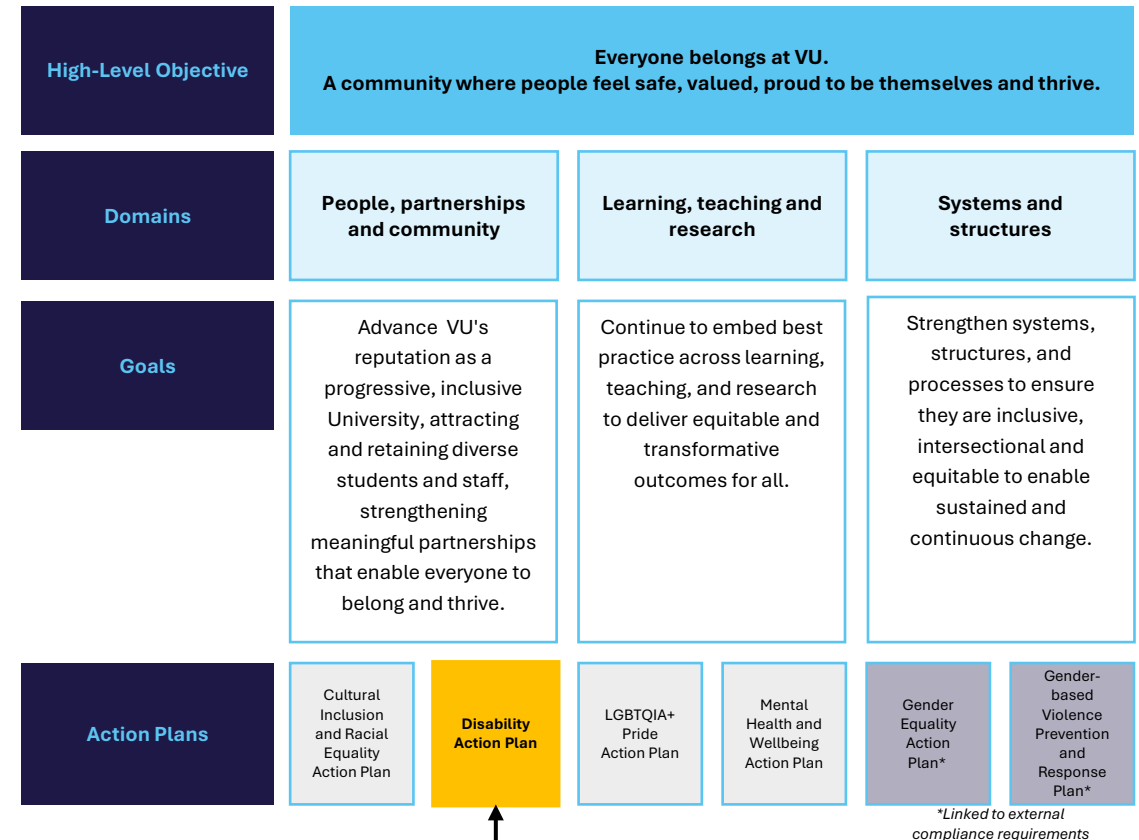

The phrase ‘nothing about us without us’ came into use in disability activism in the 1990s.

It became a powerful slogan for disability rights – calling on policy-makers and leaders to never implement change that affected people with disability without ensuring they were involved.

At VU, co-design is a core ethos for how we make change. Living experience co-design is embedded into planning, policy and the development of progressive inclusivity learning modules.

The Disability Action Plan has been directly informed by students and staff with disability. The disability community at VU are an active, passionate and proud group who significantly contribute to university life and have contributed in a meaningful way to this plan.
